ABOUT THE CONTRIBUTORS

Drs. Gerald and Ann Croissant have studied plant science in the classroom and the field for a combined 60 plus years. The couple founded the San Gabriel Mountains Regional Conservancy in 1997, and the Glendora Conservancy in 1991.

Gerald, a professor emeritus at California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, has studied at Colorado State University, University of Idaho, University of Wisconsin and New Mexico State University.

Ann, a professor emeritus at Azusa Pacific University, has degrees from University of Northern Colorado, University of Wisconsin and University of Southern California.

Born in Michigan, photographer Shirley DeBraal, has spent most of her adult life near the San Gabriels. A love of nature and hiking led her to capture the images of wildflowers for the San Gabriel Mountains Regional Conservancy. She received a BA from Hope College and was Facilities Coordinator at Citrus College.

WILDFLOWERS OF THE SAN GABRIEL MOUNTAINS

California’s San Gabriel Mountains — a hundred steps through this world is a hundred discoveries. Tucked among the hills, living in extremes in temperature, light and moisture are more than 600 kinds of flowering plants. Readers of this user-friendly guide can swiftly and successfully identify the blooms with vibrant color photographs capturing both the plant in its full glory and the intricacies of each blossom.

Detailed descriptions provide each flower’s historical and contemporary uses and tell explorers when blooms are most likely. Common names and the origins of scientific names are included. Best of all, the flowers in the guide are grouped by color, so trekkers in the San Gabriels can quickly find the plant in question.
